Dulwich Centre is delighted to announce this five day intensive on narrative therapy and community work for First Nations practitioners. This workshop will explore ways in which narrative practices can contribute to decolonising identity stories, linking stories between communities, and sharing practice of culture and healing.

This workshop has been designed with guidance from the late Aunty Barbara Wingard who was a key member of the Dulwich Centre faculty for twenty years.

Tileah is a graduate of the Master of Narrative Therapy and Community Work from the University of Melbourne and Dulwich Centre.

This intensive will introduce the key narrative practices of externalising, re-authoring, re-membering, outsider witness, documentation, and the Tree of Life, all through an Aboriginal lens. This workshop will also act as the necessary pre-requisite training to then apply for the 2027 Master of Narrative Therapy and Community Work.

All participants will also receive a copy of the book Aboriginal Narrative Practice: Honouring storylines of pride, strength and creativity by Barbara Wingard, Carolynanha Johnson & Tileah Drahm.

This event is designed for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander practitioners and other First Nations colleagues. It is for First Nations people only.
